Spending Time and Money within the Household

We consider theoretically and empirically the allocation of time and money within the household. The novelty of our empirical work is that we have a survey which provides information on both time use and the allocation of some goods within the household, for the same (married) households. Thus we can consider whether a partner who enjoys more leisure also receives more consumption (which looks like the outcome of “power” within the household) or receives less (which looks like differing tastes across households).
